Webinar, challenge or reverse squeeze?
Ask what your buyer believes.
One question picks your funnel. Here's how →

Start where their belief is.

In 1966 Eugene Schwartz argued a message has to start where the reader's awareness is. Ask one recent buyer: "Before you found us, what did you believe about solving this?"

1 → Reverse squeeze

2 → Challenge

3 → Webinar

1 · NEVER HEARD OF YOU

Reverse squeeze

They need the lesson before they'll give you anything.

The video plays first, with no form in front of it. The form appears only after they've watched enough. You need 2 or 3 case studies.

Watch: how many watch past half

2 · MUST TRY IT TO BELIEVE IT

Challenge

They believe it once they've done it.

Three days at the same hour. They build alongside you. The offer lands on day 3, on people who have already done the work.

Day 1	Day 2	Day 3
build	build	build + offer

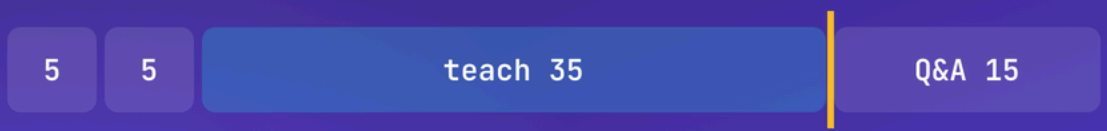

Watch: who attends a day and a half or more

3 · KNOWS YOU, NEEDS ONE IDEA REFRAMED

Webinar

They need one idea seen differently.

One dated live session: teach the method, make the offer once, near the end. The best first funnel: one session shows which message lands.

60 minutes

the offer, once, near minute 45

Watch: show-up rate, then calls booked

Two checks before you commit.

1. Who closes?

A person on a call: every step leads to the call. A page: the page answers every objection.

2. Does it fit a bad week?

Hours a week, playbook estimates:

8 to 12	10 to 15	4 to 8
webinar	challenge cohort	reverse squeeze

Plan for about half the room.

47.7%

average show-up across 33,786 sessions in 2025. And 49.6% of registrations arrived in the final week.

So never judge a registration page on day 3. Judge it on the final week, and judge your reminders on show-up.

TANTRA

Write one sentence: the funnel, and the answer that decided it.

“They need one idea reframed, and a person closes.” That’s a webinar.
